Barb Thomas, Tina Lopes : Dancing on Live Embers; Challenging Racism in Organizations before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Dancing on Live Embers; Challenging Racism in Organizations:

1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Still reading, but definitely very promising!By Lorraine WoodwardI am still reading, but this is an AMAZING book. I am so thrilled that it addresses issues of Canadian racism outside of the First Peoples issue. I live in the US but work for a bi-national agency, and I am looking forward to using this book in our ongoing conversations about how to address racism in our context.

VISUALLY DYNAMIC, Dancing on Live Embers investigates how racism, White power, and privilege operate in the ordinary moments of organizational life. It holds up familiar workplace interactions for scrutiny, and looks for openings to advance racial equity and justice. Through stories, it offers concrete examples of racial justice work by a range of experienced activists.This is a hands-on book for people who are trying to create more equitable organizations-front-line staff, managers, administrators, political leaders, union and community educators and activists, boards of directors, teachers, human resource staff, equity officers, and university and college faculty.

About the Author Tina Lopes works with community agencies, social service organizations, federal and municipal government departments, women's organizations, law firms, and unions. Barb Thomas works on equitable program design and facilitator training, and strategic problem-solving. She is one of the co-authors of Education for Changing Unions (BTL, 2002), and Educating for a Change (BTL, 1991).
