

[Free and download] Hurricane from the Heavens: The Battle of Cold Harbor, May 26 - June 5, 1864
(Emerging Civil War Series)

Hurricane from the Heavens: The Battle of Cold Harbor, May 26 - June 5, 1864 (Emerging Civil War Series)

Daniel Davis, Phillip Greenwalt
ebooks | Download PDF | *ePub | DOC | audiobook

 Download

 Read Online

#965300 in Books 2014-05-05 2014-05-19Original language:EnglishPDF # 1 9.00 x .44 x 6.00l, .66 #File
Name: 1611211875192 pages | File size: 73.Mb

Daniel Davis, Phillip Greenwalt : Hurricane from the Heavens: The Battle of Cold Harbor, May 26 - June 5, 1864 (Emerging Civil War Series) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Hurricane from the Heavens: The Battle of Cold Harbor, May 26 - June 5, 1864 (Emerging Civil War Series):

4 of 4 people found the following review helpful. Good if you plan trip to the battle site. By George S Too many repetitious descriptions of the battle from different sources. Chapters interspersed with automobile travelogues of directions to the various sites. Good details of battle but interrupted by summaries of what you will already have read of 2 people found the following review helpful. Could be better By Sadaunhe1 This a well researched, but poorly proofed book. This is a shame. The authors clearly are devoted to the material, but the poor editing provides a constant irritation to anyone who loves the English language. Unless you are considering the book for its driving tour information, I suggest you look elsewhere for enjoyable reading on the Overland Campaign. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. A focused study of one of General Lee's last victories. By Robert H Ziprick A well written history of one of the Confederacy's last victories. I wish this book had existed when visiting the battlefield as it provides sufficient detail to enhance such exploration. It also provides the background of the events which led the two contending armies to this battlefield.

“Lee’s army is really whipped,” Federal commander Ulysses S. Grant believed. May 1864 had witnessed near-constant combat between his Army of the Potomac and the Confederate Army of Northern Virginia. Grant, unlike his predecessors, had not relented in his pounding of the Confederates. The armies clashed in the Wilderness and at Spotsylvania Courthouse and along the North Anna River. Whenever combat failed to break the Confederates, Grant resorted to maneuver. “I propose to fight it out along this line if it takes all summer,” Grant vowed—and it had. Casualties mounted on both sides—but Grant kept coming. Although the great, decisive assault had eluded him, he continued to punish Lee’s army. The blows his army landed were nothing like the Confederates had experienced before. The constant marching and fighting had reduced Robert E. Lee’s once-vaunted army into a bedraggled husk of its former glory. In Grant’s mind, he had worn his foes down and now prepared to deliver the deathblow. Turning Lee’s flank once more, he hoped to fight the final, decisive battle of the war in the area bordering the Pamunkey and Chickahominy rivers, less than fifteen miles from the outskirts of the Confederate capital of Richmond. “I may be mistaken, but I feel that our success over Lee’s army is already assured,” Grant confided to Washington. The stakes had grown enormous. Grant’s staggering casualty lists had driven Northern morale to his lowest point of the war. Would Lee’s men hold on to defend their besieged capital—and, in doing so, prolong the war until the North will collapsed entirely? Or would another round of hard fighting finally be enough to crush Lee’s army? Could Grant push through and end the war? Grant would find his answers around a small Virginia crossroads called Cold Harbor—and he would always regret the results. Historians Daniel T. Davis and Phillip S. Greenwalt have studied the 1864 Overland Campaign since their early days working at Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park, where Grant first started on his bloody road south—a road that eventually led straight into the eye of a proverbial “Hurricane from the Heavens.” Hurricane from the Heavens can be read in the comfort of one’s favorite armchair or as a battlefield guide. It is part of the popular Emerging Civil War Series, which offers compelling, easy-to-read overviews of some of the Civil War’s most important stories. The masterful storytelling is richly enhanced with more than one hundred photos, illustrations, and maps.

About the Author Daniel Davis is a graduate of Longwood University, with a B.A. in Public History. Dan has worked as a historian at both Appomattox Court House National Historic Site and at the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park. He resides in Fredericksburg, VA, with his wife Katy and their Beagle mix, Bayla. Phillip Greenwalt holds a B.A. in History from Wheeling Jesuit University and a M.A. in American History from George Mason University. He works for the National Park Service at George Washington Birthplace National Monument and Thomas Stone National Historic Site. Previously, he was a historical interpreter at Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Military Park. He currently resides in the Historic Northern Neck of Virginia with his wife, Adel.