Bought it for school but really like it By Bia This book contains a lot of very interesting chapters about almost every social subject (since they are all connected and when we study inequality, we also need to study class, gender, political system, economic system, race, etc). Very good to learn about how things really work in society. 1 of 1 people found the following review helpful. Good Book By Christi MBA It's not heavy and easy to read. It's a paper back copy and I really like the book and it's perfect for my class. 0 of 3 people found the following review helpful. College reading By James Waring My daughter ordered this for her college class. She'll probably try to sell it at the end of the semester,

For courses in Inequality, Social Stratification, and Social Problems. A thoughtful compilation of readings on inequality in the United States. The main objective of this text is to introduce students to the subject of social stratification as it has developed in sociology. The central focus is on domestic inequality in the United States with some attention to the broader international context. The primary goal of the text is to offer an understanding of the history and context of debates about inequality, and a secondary goal is to give some indication as to what issues are likely to arise in the future.

About the Author John Brueggemann is Professor of Sociology at Skidmore College in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology, and Social Work. He received a B.A. in Sociology and Anthropology from Earlham College (1987) and Masters (1990) and Doctoral (1994) degrees in sociology from Emory University. He has spent his career since then at Skidmore College as a teacher, scholar and administrator. During these 14 years he has taught and written about a range of topics including class, race, inequality, religion, morality, history, social theory and social change. His written work has appeared in academic journals such as Social Problems, Work and Occupations, Social Science History, The Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, Critical Sociology, and Theology Today. I also coauthored Racial Competition and Class Solidarity, which was published by SUNY in 2006.
