More than One Mississippi BrigadeBy Grover SmithBe aware that there is more than one " The Mississippi Brigade " there is also " The Mississippi Brigade of Brig. Gen Barksdale's Brigade that at death of Barksdale at Gettysburg became " Humphrey's Brigade " . My ancestor in the later (21ST Miss. Inf. Regt. member of Barksdale's) .2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Excellent history of a forgotten brigadeBy JBCSLCThis is an excellent history of a little-known brigade of the Army of Northern Virginia. The brigade was put together mid-way through the war to consolidate several Mississippi regiments into one brigade (with one NC regiment), perhaps also to give President Davis's nephew, Joseph R Davis, a chance to command a brigade. While the separate regiments had had previous combat experience, Davis's brigade first fought as a unit leading the Confederate attack the first day at Gettysburg, then, two days later, was the left flank brigade of "Pickett's Charge"; later that year finding itself on the front line attacking at Bristoe Station. The story continues with surprising description of the brigade's critical position, independently holding off Hancock's attack early the morning of May 6 in the Wilderness, then its active role throughout the Overland Campaign to Petersburg. This Mississippi Brigade, one of three in Lee's army, had several critical roles in the Petersburg campaign, with inexorable attrition finally leading to the surrender of only a few dozen veterans at Appomattox. The book is a brigade history, not a military biography, and several of the regimental commanders played key roles that would have qualified them for brigade command in other units. This is an easy-to-read, indispensable addition to any ANV or Mississippi history study.
