Raymond C. Colton : The Sacrificial Lambs before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Sacrificial Lambs:

Selflessness and courage comprise those who join the military and go off to foreign lands to defend our country. Leaving behind family, friends and spouses, these men and women face their enemy and mortality to recognize a much grander concept: freedom. The Korean War has often been overshadowed by the power of World War I and II and the revolutionary years of Vietnam. Yet the men who were in Korea and fought on behalf of the United States sacrificed just as much as their fellow men in previous and later wars. In the autobiographical work "Sacrificial Lambs," author Raymond Colton tells his story of joining the military at the age of eighteen with grand notions of Army life only to realize the illusions of what constitutes a hero. Telling and honest, Colton's "Sacrificial Lambs" allows readers to experience his pain in serving a country that, upon returning home, treated him differently as a disabled veteran. Colton gives voice to all who fought in the Korean War and portrays the "real life" experiences of a Korean War soldier and hero.

About the Author Raymond Colton studied at Bryan College and Western New England College, following years spent in various employment roles including Quality Control Manager, Production Control Manager, a Purchasing Agent and Aircraft parts Buyer. He is a member of many prestigious military groups such as the Disabled American Veterans, a Member of Veterans' Foreign Wars. Colton is currently retired and on the Board of Directors. He resides in Connecticut.
